Landscapes

- ◆ Landscape is often perceived as the scenery than can be seen from a point of view. This definition of landscape is a good common definition.
- ◆ We rather prefer another definition: landscape is the result of how people relate with nature.

Management agreements

Why bother?

Nature conservation is not always susceptible of generating financial return on its cost.

In these circumstances:

- a) either common people mobilize funds from other activities to pay for conservation;
- b) or the State fully assumes those costs;
- c) or the natural values are likely to be passed over against more rational decisions from the point of view of immediate return of the properties.

Hands on

We believe that management capability is a crucial instrument for the rational management of marginal territories suffering from severe abandonment.

From people to people

From people to people

From people to people

Hands on

The public will have the opportunity to visit areas managed primarily for conservation and have direct contact with a landscape and with plants and animals that one rarely sees in other circumstances.
